1	<ul style="list-style-type: none">Although the disclosure of documents for the Annual General Shareholders Meeting via your website has become standard with the advancement of digitalization, given that it is inconvenient to have to log in to view the information, is it possible to consider a framework under which the provision of paper-based information is prioritized?	<ul style="list-style-type: none">We recognize that the provision of information regarding the Annual General Shareholders Meeting (AGSM) is important. However, in light of the intent of the electronic provision rules, we have adopted disclosure via our website as the primary method, both to provide shareholders with information at an early stage and to conserve paper resources.The Notice of the AGSM is provided electronically pursuant to the Companies Act and is available on our website (https://www.jpx.co.jp/corporate/investor-relations/shareholders/meeting/index.html), which can be accessed without logging in. In addition, at this year's AGSM, we provided viewers of the live broadcast with a link to the Notice of the AGSM on the live broadcast screen. We will continue to make efforts to further enhance usability, such as by making improvements to the screen layout. <ul style="list-style-type: none">We have taken note of your comment as valuable feedback and will consider it in light of legal frameworks and practices throughout the market.
